

Transition Assessment Self-Reflection Tool

Strong transition plans and services are built upon well-designed transition assessment. Consider each of the 15 indicators of high-quality transition assessment listed below. To what extent is each indicator reflected in the assessments you do with the students with disabilities you serve? What steps might you take to strengthen the way you approach the transition assessment process?

4. Incorporating Multiple Approaches? Transition assessment incorporates information from more than one data collection approach when determining a student's goals. It does not rely on a single source of information (e.g., an interview with a student or a rating scale from teacher).	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
5. Bringing in Multiple Perspectives? Transition assessment draws upon input from those individuals who are in the best position to evaluate the student's strengths, interests, preferences, and needs in a particular area. Multiple people are providing input and all assessment information does not come from a single person.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>

8. Reflecting Real-Life Demands? Transition assessments address the specific skills, knowledge, behaviors, attitudes, or supports students will actually need to be successful in the actual postsecondary contexts for which they are preparing. In other words, evidence exists that the selected assessments closely mirror the actual demands of future environments. Similarly, simulated environments should not be used as a substitute for assessment in actual environments.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
9. Inclusion-Focused? Transition assessments address the skills, knowledge, behaviors, attitudes, or supports students will need to participate in integrated community activities and settings alongside persons without disabilities in the community.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
