College Admissions

Exploring Colleges

- Start looking at colleges by junior year of high school. The earlier you look, the better it will be for planning.
- Visit and research several schools to find your fit.
- Apply to as many schools as you want. You do not want to limit yourself, but you also do not want to overwhelm yourself.

Application Timeline

- Start applying the fall or winter before hoping to start classes.
- Keep track of deadlines to make sure you don't miss any important dates.
- Give yourself at least a month before applications are due to work on them.

Disclosure During the Admissions Process

- Disability disclosure is always up to the individual.
- If you want to disclose your disability in the application process, do it. If not, you can disclose after you are accepted to the school. Remember, you never have to disclose your disability unless you would like to receive accommodations.
- Still apply to the college if your test scores are lower than what the school recommends.
  - Recommendation: Write a letter or reach out to school to explain lower scores.

Disability Services Offices

Transitioning to College

- Plan ahead for college classes
- Work on independence skills
- Establish a strong transition plan

Disability Disclosure

- If you want to use accommodations, you will need to provide the appropriate documentation. Check with the individual school to determine what types of documentation you need.

- Even if you don't think you'll need accommodations, disability services staff encourage you to sign up for them anyways.
  - Setting up accommodations can take some time, so you can sign up for them and not use them. But if you need them, they are already in place. If you wait until you need them, you will not get them immediately.

Applying for Accommodations

- Register with disability services as soon as you are accepted to the college and decide you will attend.
- Provide copies of test reports or other documentation of disability and IEP.
- Follow up immediately if more information is requested.
- Verify registration is complete before semester starts.
